SEO - Keyword Research

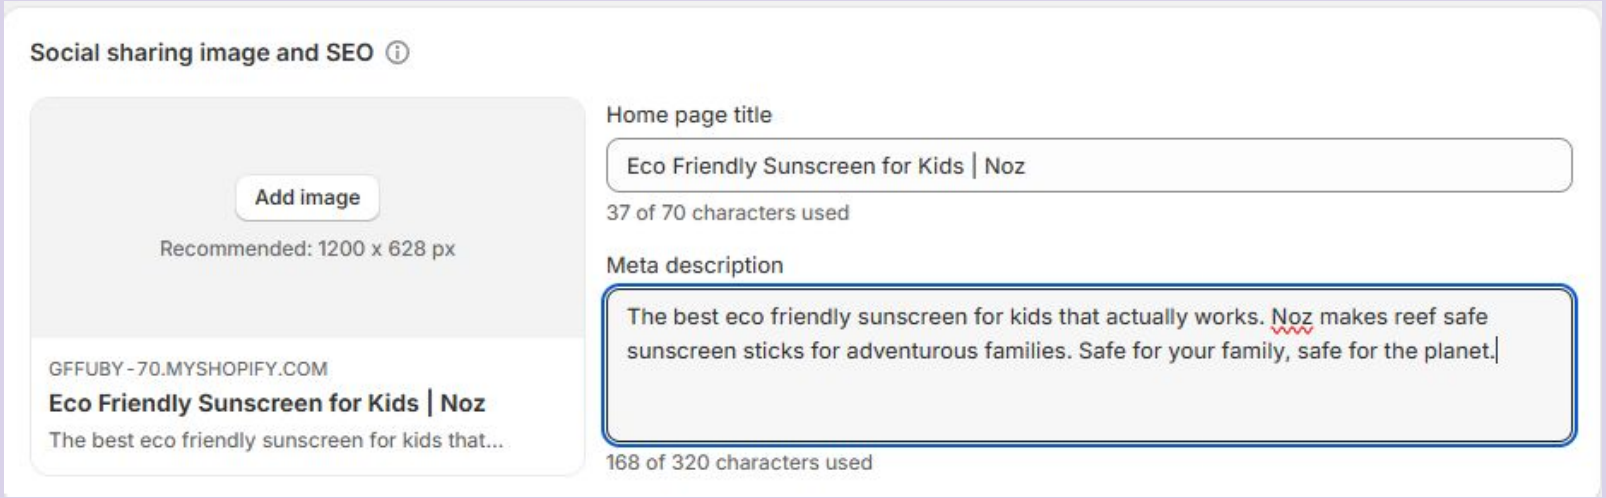

- [biodegradable sunscreen]
- [dermatologist recommended sunscreen]
- [eco friendly sunscreen]
- [reef safe sunscreen]
- [zinc oxide sunscreen]

I chose these words because they balance high commercial intent with strong search volume with reasonable keyword difficulty. These words help my customer persona align her values with the product she's looking for.

WHAT I STOPPED BUYING SO I COULD AFFORD THE THINGS THAT MATTER

Last year I sat down with our budget, which is something I do when I need to feel in control of something, anything. I highlighted every subscription, every impulse buy, every "eco friendly" swap that had turned into another forgotten product in the back of a cabinet. The reusable snack bags we never remember to wash. The glass straws that shattered in the dishwasher. The natural sunscreen for face that cost forty dollars and separated into oil and white paste by June. I was trying so hard. And I was tired. Being an environmentally conscious parent is expensive. Not just in money, though that's real. In time. In mental energy. In the constant calculation of whether this choice is actually...

THE MORNING MY DAUGHTER ASKED WHY HER SUNSCREEN WAS BLUE

I was rushing. Of course I was rushing. It was a Tuesday, which in our house means school drop-off, a work meeting I was already late for, and a lunchbox I had forgotten to pack until exactly seven minutes before we needed to leave. I grabbed the kids sunscreen from the counter, the one I'd spent twenty minutes researching last week, and swiped it across my daughter's nose. She looked up at me. "Why is it blue?" I paused. The tube was neon blue. I hadn't even thought about it. "Because it's fun," I said, which felt like a lazy answer. But she smiled. She asked if she could put some on her brother. He said no. She did it...

THE FIRST TIME I GOT SUNBURNED ON MY NOSE, AND THE LAST

I was seven. My mom had slathered me in whatever white goop came in the family size bottle, and I promptly wiped it off my nose because it smelled like a chemical plant and felt like paste. By 3 p.m., my nose was the color of a stop sign and twice as noticeable. I spent the rest of the vacation with a peeling nose and a grudge against sunscreen. If you're a mom in Boulder, or anywhere with altitude and sunshine, you know the drill. You read the labels. You buy the best spf for face you can find. You chase your kids around with a tube of something that claims to be "natural" while they treat you like you're...
